Textbook: Mass Communication: Living in a Media World – By Ralph Hanson
Other readings will be posted on the course Blackboard space

Course Outcomes: Students who successfully complete COMM 101 should:

- Gain field-specific knowledge and information literacy
- Practice communication skills (written and oral)
- Hone creative and critical thinking skills
- Develop interpersonal and teamwork skills

Course Structure

This will not be your typical lecture-based class. Learning is more interesting, and more effective, when multiple modes of instruction are used. There will be short lectures, video clips, audio clips, some Prezi slides, and (most important of all) discussion. With this in mind, your experience in this class will be largely what you make of it – the more effort you put in, the more you will get out of the course. The critical skills you develop in this course, specifically with regard to media content, will remain useful to you outside of the classroom. Our discussions and assignments may be viewed as an intellectual map; a way for you to grasp the concepts of the course and more fully develop your own thinking. It is my goal that the material and learning from this course do not stop at the classroom doors – consider and use this information to better understand the world around you.

As discussion will be a vital aspect of this class, it is understood that to meaningfully participate in these discussions, you will need to have completed the assigned readings and thought about the topic for that day. Challenging assumptions, preconceptions, and “common wisdom” will be a critical aspect of this course. As such, it is understood that all viewpoints will be treated with respect. I encourage disagreement (even with me), but be sure to do so agreeably.

Assignments/Requirements/Course Schedule

Reading / Critical Thinking Papers

This class is largely organized around critical thinking and class discussion. To facilitate both, it is vital that you come to class have read, and thought about, the material for the day. You will need to turn in a critical analysis worksheet to a dropbox on Blackboard by noon on Sunday before the week’s classes. The worksheet will encourage you to think about the readings and come to class prepared to talk about its analysis and implications. A template form with the questions I will ask you to answer is available on Blackboard – you will need to provide responses for each of the weeks’ readings. Over the course of the semester, there will be 11 weeks of reading. Each week’s analysis will be worth a maximum of 5 points. The grade breakdown is as follows:

- 5 Points – it is clear to me that you read and thought critically about the readings.
- 3 Points – it is clear that you did the readings, but did not think critically about them
- 1 Point – It is not obvious that you did the readings, nor thought much about them
- 0 Points – It is obvious that you did not do the readings

Student Discussion Leading

Twice per semester students will be responsible for leading the class in a discussion about a topic of their choice – one that is relevant to the material being covered that week. The discussions should last between 5 and 15 minutes and are not presentations. Students should instead seek to ask questions and probe issues in such a way as to encourage a class conversation about the topic at hand. To facilitate discussion, students can use presentations, Youtube clips, blog posts, or any other multimedia that is relevant. The instructor may also step in if there is a point of particular interest related to that day’s topic.

Discussion Board Participation

Thinking about, and applying, class concepts is an important part of the course. Each week the instructor will create a discussion board post that students will need to engage with. This could take the form of a response to the initial post, or a response to a student post. These posts should be somewhat detailed and in-depth (no “I agree” or “I’m not sure”) and provide a thoughtful response to the topic. Some examples will be posted in the discussion board so students have a better idea of the expectation for these posts.

Persuasive Speech & Peer Evaluation

You will present an 8-10 minute persuasive speech on a controversy related to the medium you are studying, providing information about the issue and explaining what you think should be done about it. Your goal is to persuade the audience that your solution is the best. You will be expected to define the problem, provide its context, provide pros and cons, and end with your own personal opinion. You will be graded on evidence of research; thoroughness (whether you discussed all of the areas above); organization; how well the audience is likely to remember the information you presented (handing out lecture notes or an outline will help audience members); whether the audience was persuaded; and creativity. Your peers will also provide feedback on your presentation. More information about the assignment will be announced in class.

Informative Speech

For this assignment, you will create a 5 to 6-minute digital presentation based on a discussion question from your assigned chapter in our textbook, Converging Media. Your goal is to build on the discussion question, and to add your perspective and insight in a digital format. You may use PowerPoint (or other software that you are comfortable with, such as iMovie) to create a 5- to 6-minute presentation for your classmates to watch on Blackboard. The presentation should be both audio and visual (remember this is a speaking-intensive class). Be sure to address the question carefully and thoroughly. Your last slide should be a list of references addressing the sources you used to develop your response to the discussion question. More information about the assignment will be announced in class.

What you can remember, and articulate, outside the classroom interests me as much as what you learn inside it. There will be two speech assignments in which you will present or synthesize class material in a clear and concise way. For one, you will present class material in a classroom setting, for the other you will be creating a digital presentation that we will share and discuss through our class forum. You will also be responsible for evaluating your classmates presentations

Participation and Attendance

We each bring a different set of experiences to the classroom. Finding a way to use these experiences to either build new knowledge, or change preconceptions, is a large part of the learning process. This can only happen, however, if people contribute meaningfully to the classroom dialogue. Share your thoughts, show your knowledge, and help apply the concepts we will be discussing to everyday life. Beyond contributing to class, part of the participation process is arriving to class on time and paying attention for the duration. You cannot participate if you do not show up for class. You are allotted 1 “free” absence. After that, each additional absence will result in losing 3% points off your final grade. However, I do understand that school, home, and work responsibilities often overlap, so if you let me know in advance you cannot make it to class, we can work together to devise a make-up plan.

Course Grades: There will be 100 possible points in this class. The breakdown is as follows:

Critical Reading Assignments	50 Points
Class Discussion Leading	15 Points
Discussion Board Participation	15 Points
Presentations (Oral and Digital)	20 Points

Late Assignments: Assignments will be accepted up to one week after their due date. I understand that “life happens” and sometimes deadlines cannot be met. However, work that is turned in late will be graded more harshly, and full credit will not be given.
