Do you have a class where you:
  - Often have students in groups or pairs?
  - Use role playing, peer teaching/grading?
  - Use problem/project based learning?

Then you might want to schedule the new ALC in Pearson!

There is a new Active Learning Classroom in the Pearson Library! It will only be open during library hours (M-F 8:15am-11:45pm; SS 10:15am-11:45pm). It will be scheduled just like other special classrooms, via the Astra and the Registrar, with the approval of your dean during the class scheduling process.

Why Use an ALCs?
Physical spaces impact teaching and learning: ALCs are great for peer collaboration; and collaboration increases SLO achievement, grades, productivity, self-esteem, and positive attitudes towards learning.

What ALCs Are NOT
Do NOT schedule ALCs if you need a computer lab; it is for group work, not individual computer work.
Do NOT schedule ALCs if you predominately lecture. Many of your students will have their backs to you and it will be hard for them to listen and take notes.

ALCs are designed to foster interactive, flexible, student-centered learning experiences, and operate using decentralized student work stations and Cal Lutheran laptops.

If you would like to discuss ideas for the space, see if it is right for one of your classes, or have any questions or comments about it; please contact Cia DeMartino at cdemarti@callutheran.edu
